Six months ago this week, terror, tragedy and outrage then reared its monstrous head as a decade-long struggle lighted the fires of violence over Israel-Palestine relations. The conflict in the region has been a catalyst for violent confrontations, the像 that began on that day.

That’s when two individuals, in a fit of anger, decided to post a comment to an opinion column in this newspaper that contained language some might consider offensive.

We shut it down and issued an apology.

Two years ago this week, another incident occurred in the region that changed everything.

That was when a group of individuals, in a fit of anger, decided to dataArray comment on an opinion column in this newspaper that contained language some might consider offensive.

We shut it down and issued an apology.

Today, those two events take on a new meaning as we mark the anniversary of another contentious situation that has left a lasting impact on the region.

It’s not just about what happened then. It’s about what we can learn from it and how we can move forward together.

That’s why this week, we’re dedicating our coverage to exploring the lessons we can all take from these events and how we can use that knowledge to build a stronger and more resilient community in the future.

We hope you’ll join us in this conversation. Together, we can create a better tomorrow for all.

The Press-Enterprise